Review

When her father refuses to pledge his allegiance to the newly crowned King, Lady Agnes, who prefers to be called Maddy, finds herself branded a traitor's daughter and is reduced to living like a pauper due to her Cousin Eleanor's ruthless and capricious streak. Friendless and landless, Maddy would do anything to feel loved and appreciated again. So she is over the moon when the handsome Lord Hugo begins to pursue her. However, Maddy soon realizes that the reason why Lord Hugo is so keen on winning her hand has got nothing to do with romance...

Shocked when she learns the truth behind Lord Hugo's scheme for seduction, Maddy vows that she will not have anything more to do with him and when the King informs her that she is to marry one of his knights, she gratefully accepts, unaware that her troubles are only just beginning...

Her bridegroom, Sir Geraint, had no desire to marry a woman he has never met. But he knows that he must do his King's bidding if he wants to get ahead. Thus he agrees to marry Maddy, even though he knows that he can never respect a woman who agrees to marry someone she does not love. Sir Geraint had planned to marry a woman he loved wholeheartedly with whom he could spend the rest of his life – and he's pretty sure that Maddy will not be that woman. But there's a shock in store for Geraint when he realizes that the woman he's about to marry is the woman who has been haunting his thoughts and dreams!

When he had first clapped eyes on her, Geraint had thought that Maddy was a poor kennel maid, so he's shocked when he realizes that she's a noblewoman! Geraint may be a wool merchant's son, but he is determined to show Maddy that he will now be her lord and master.

But when Maddy begins to suspect that somebody wants her dead, she realizes that the only man who can help her is her husband.

My Lady Innocent is a compelling historical romance written by an extraordinary new writer! Evocative, captivating and absorbing, this richly woven tale of intrigue, romance and betrayal will sweep readers back to the fifteenth century and leave them breathless!
